It's His Problem

IT IS A GOOD thing, we believe, for every citizen to look at national and international problems as if HE were the one to solve them. He does not know, of course, some of the background of such matters. Still he will be affected by their outcome and is entitled to an opinion.

If you are concerned as to the present situation of the world, here are some problems. They were outlined by Allen Dulles, chief of our Central Intelligence Office. They are his idea of the main crisis in a world in ferment. Try your hand at resolving these:

"Revolt against the last vestiges of colonialism."

"Uprising within the satellite states of Europe against Moscow domination."

"The all-out attempt by the Communist bloc to sell its theories and its wares throughout what we call the uncommitted areas of the world."

"The conflict between the free world and its program of building up a society based on the principles of freedom and the attempt by the Communist bloc to make over the world in its image."
